

Fourth Short Paper

Explain the legal case of McLoughlin v. O'Brian. What is the strongest argument for the claim that the judges in this case were disagreeing, not about what the law was, but about what it should be? What is the strongest argument for Dworkin's position that the disagreement was about what the law was/is? Is there a right answer to this hard case?