Gerry Ramey spent six weeks in Windhoek, Namibia this past summer at the Polytechnic University working with faculty and administration on teaching and research projects. In addition he completed a system-wide organizational analysis of their College of Business and the Administration.

While in Namibia, Gerry (and his wife Marsha), were able to spend time on an extended tour of the largest wildlife area in Namibia, perhaps in all of Africa.

The complexities of post-apartheid life are still very much a part of all public and private organizations. While certainly new to the country (first visit to Africa), his observations of multiple social interactions will give new life to his classes at Eastern Oregon University.

Presentation begins at 4:00 pm

Refreshments provided at 3:30 pm
