PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

Greetings Alumni,

On behalf of all Eastern Oregon University students, faculty and staff, I would like to humbly thank you for your wonderful support. As we prepare for Eastern's next president to step into their leadership role, I reflect on everything you have helped us accomplish. Our challenges have been great, and the ways in which you have responded to assist us are many.

Financial giving to the EOU Foundation for increased scholarship opportunities has made a difference in whether some students attended at all, or were able to stay once admitted and enrolled. Donors made additional gifts or provided special funding for students, and others helped us initiate the 100/$100 Club in which businesses and individuals were asked to contribute $100 to a Union County Pride Scholarship. Our goal for this new scholarship was $10,000, and for 2009-10, we were able to award $1,500 each to seven local students. These gifts have truly made a huge difference in the lives of individuals and have helped us with our enrollment growth—thank you.

Many of you have been attending more EOU events. Your involvement on the campus and in the lives of our students enriches our environment and demonstrates the bond that must exist in a region where we truly ARE all in this together. Still others of you volunteer while serving on the Alumni Association Board, university-community committees, on the boards of foundations connected to Eastern and with the Booster Club—thank you.

As we move forward into the future with its additional challenges and unknowns, I am confident that we will work together, as we have so clearly done in the recent past. EOU will continue to be, as our mission statement proudly states, "the educational, cultural, and scholarly center that connects the rural regions of Oregon to a wider world." You are all an important part of that mission, and I sincerely thank you for the many ways in which you help to support us and to increase and retain our student enrollments.

Gratefully,

Dixie Lund
Interim President, EOU

Davies named EOU president

Dr. Bob Davies, currently vice president for university relations at Indiana University of Pennsylvania, has been named the new president of EOU. The State Board of Higher Education voted unanimously to appoint Davies as president and he will replace interim president Dixie Lund, who has served in this role since July 2007.

Dr. Bob Davies

“The appointment of Dr. Davies as president of EOU is an exciting beginning to a new chapter in Eastern’s history of serving rural Oregon,” said Paul Kelly, Board president. “His higher education background in managing community outreach and partnerships, in fundraising, and in advocating for universities with numerous constituents makes him a perfect fit for EOU and its important regional mission. He will be a wonderful new leader and partner in Eastern Oregon and I know that he will be embraced by the La Grande and the larger regional community.”

Davies, who will begin at EOU around July 1, has served as vice president for university relations at Indiana University of Pennsylvania since 2006.

“I am very excited about joining the EOU community as its next president,” Davies said. “I have been so warmly welcomed by the Eastern and La Grande community that I already feel like a resident. EOU has been a transformative force for so many Oregon students who have experienced campus life, and students from all over the state as well through its stellar distance education programs. I look forward to working with the faculty, staff, students, and EOU’s many community partners to further the campus’ mission and service in Oregon. I can’t wait to call myself an Eastern Oregonian.”

The search committee for the president of EOU, which began its work early last fall, was chaired by Board vice president Tony van Vliet.

Preservation best option for Grand Staircase

The results of a comprehensive study on the restoration of EOU’s Grand Staircase and View Terrace are in and the Grand Staircase Task Force, assisted by SERA Architects, has developed a vision for preservation of the historic structure.

Members of the task force worked closely with SERA since last spring to develop a plan for the staircase located adjacent to Inlow Hall. Faculty, staff, students, alumni and community members appointed to the committee by EOU President Dixie Lund spent months reviewing extensive reports and discussing the vision and purpose of the property.

Three possibilities were considered for the project that included restoration, partial restoration and preservation. The task force ultimately chose preservation as the most viable avenue to save the whole structure. This provides for a permanent but reversible barrier system that saves the historic edifice from further deterioration while addressing the hazard posed by its currently unsafe condition.

Hill International, an independent cost estimator, provided budgets for each possibility. The task force reviewed each one and chose what it considered to be the most fiscally responsible option that also benefited EOU and the community.

EOU Foundation receives $1.5 million gift

In October, the EOU Foundation received two contributions from an anonymous donor totaling $1.5 million—the largest single private contribution in EOU’s 79-year history.

The first $1 million gift is restricted to scholarships and will provide financial assistance in priority order to women, under-represented minorities and all eligible EOU students. A second $500,000 donation will provide unrestricted funds for Foundation-supported programs.

“Providing financial support to students in the form of scholarships is vitally important, especially in the midst of this difficult economic climate,” said Steve Joseph, president of the EOU Foundation. “These tremendous gifts will enable the Foundation to help even more students and continue to support EOU’s mission far into the future.”

Tim Seydel, associate vice president for Marketing, Development and Public Affairs at EOU, said the Foundation will place the funds into endowments and earnings should be available for scholarships to students beginning next fall. The total $1.5 million charitable contribution equals approximately one-third of the Foundation’s current endowment.

Daugherty Hall named after long-time EOU supporters

During EOU’s 2008 Homecoming and Oktoberfest celebration, two alumni were recognized for contributions that make a difference in the lives of a multitude of students. South Hall, one of EOU’s two new residence halls, was named Michael and Susan Daugherty Residence Hall in honor of Mike and Sue Daugherty of La Grande.

“Mike and Sue are, to us, symbols of what makes EOU so special,” said Dixie Lund, EOU president. “Their years of passionate, tireless and ongoing dedication to the university, significant contributions to the EOU Foundation, and commitment to higher education make Eastern a better place—now and in the future. They embody all that is good about EOU.”

Mike Daugherty may be best known for the leadership role he filled as director of residence life at EOU. He retired in 2008 from his nearly 30-year career, but his history at Eastern goes back to when he was a student in the early 1970s. Mike graduated summa cum laude from EOU in 1974 and Sue graduated in 1976 with a degree in education.

The Daugherty’s contributions to EOU include an estate gift to the EOU Foundation. Their gift has been designated for scholarships for residence hall directors and students majoring in education and will also provide unrestricted support for the Foundation.

Community member's gift contributes to campus safety and aesthetics

The new clock tower gracing the campus quad is part of a generous gift from Robbie Waller, of La Grande, which also included funding for a new carillon that doubles as an emergency notification device.

The individual responsible for the crystalline melodies ringing out across campus isn't a carillonist, but she is someone who appreciates music in its many forms.

Robbie Waller, of La Grande, particularly enjoys the music of bells, so much so that she gifted the funds to the EOU Foundation enabling the university to purchase a new carillon. The state-of-the-art, automated musical instrument was installed in the Hoke Union Building last spring.

The carillon has an internal library of over 400 songs and can also be programmed to play original music, such as Eastern's alma mater tune. Melodies produced by the new carillon are not only pleasing to the ear, the customizable features also enable it to function as an emergency notification device. The system will enable EOU to quickly alert students, faculty and staff in the event of an emergency by delivering specific, attention-getting tones, followed by a verbal message with detailed information about the situation and specific instructions for people on campus to follow.

Regular tests of the system will be conducted throughout the academic year and it is just one of the tools EOU will use to alert the campus community during an emergency. Internal voicemail, e-mail and the school's Web site are already being utilized. EOU is also partnering with other Oregon University System schools to implement a text-messaging system. The system is subscriber-based to disseminate information as quickly as possible among students and other subscribers via cell phones, landlines and e-mail systems.

Waller's gift also included funding for a substantial clock tower installed in the campus quad. The tower has four clock faces that light up at night, featuring the EOU logo. Both the carillon and clock tower will be named in honor of Waller's father, C.W. Hoffman. Hoffman founded Rhonde Valley Lumber Company in Union in 1950, Eagle Trucking in 1977 and many other area enterprises. He was also an avid musician.

Club generates scholarships for local students

A new club is quickly gaining momentum in Union County. It's not a chess or scrapbook club, a fantasy football league or online gaming forum. Think of it as a fan club for EOU students.

In its first months of operation, the Union County 100/$100 Scholarship Club experienced huge success, surpassing the goal of attracting 100 donors to contribute a minimum of $100 to raise $10,000 annually in scholarships for EOU students. The University-County Connections Committee chaired by Nellie Bogue-Hibbert, a Union County Commissioner, formed the club.

On-campus students who have lived in Union County for at least two years are eligible for awards, but Bogue-Hibbert hopes the project will become a model for other counties to follow as well. Anyone who gives $100 or more can become a member. For more information contact the Marketing, Development and Public Affairs Office at (541) 962-3740 or e-mail mdpa@eou.edu.

Memorial honors pioneers, American Indians buried in historic cemetery

Below: A Nez Perce text inscribed on the memorial reads "Our people lived all over this Grande Ronde. They are buried here under this ground. We will never forget all the families. And now we sanctify this land."

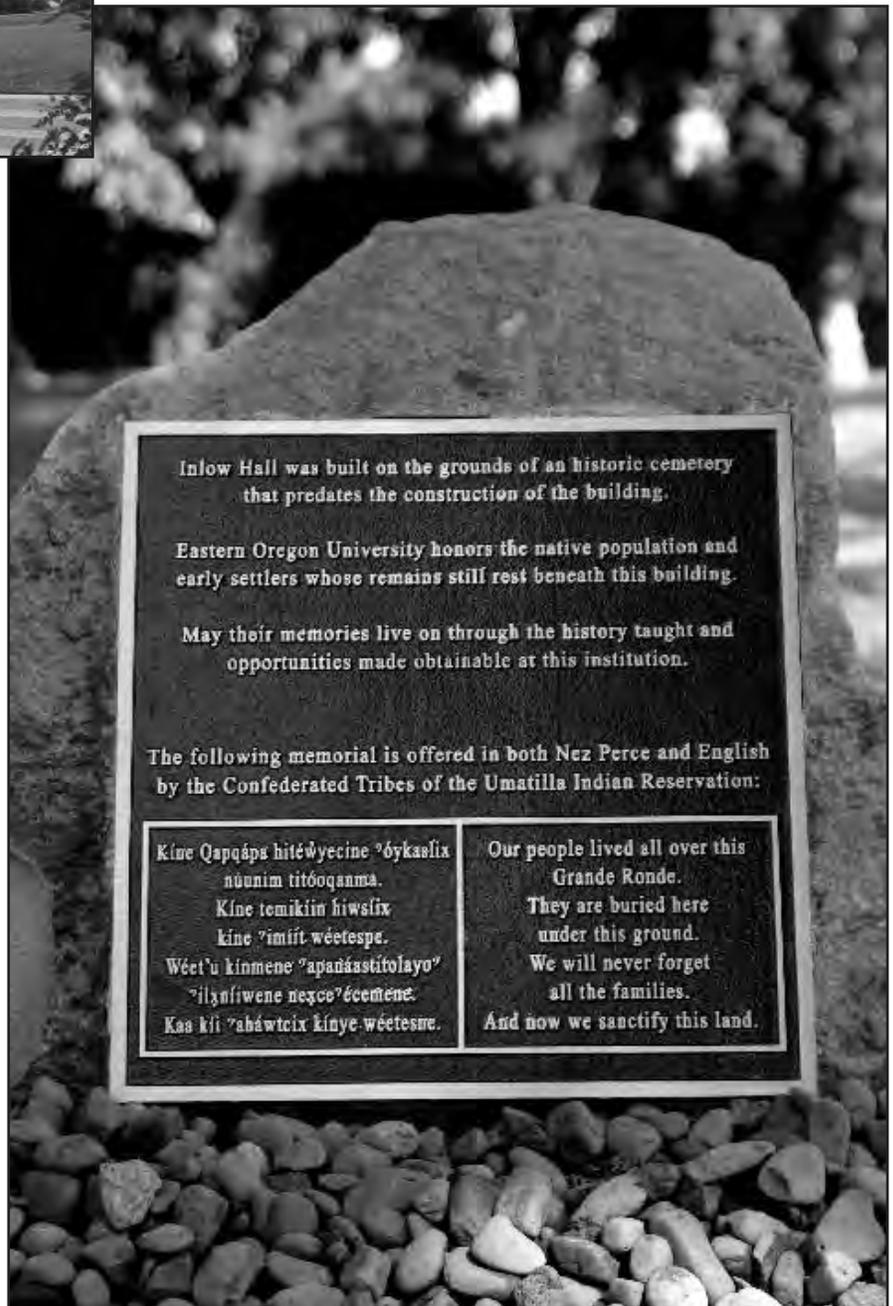

EOU and the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation, (CTUIR), unveiled a memorial late last summer commemorating Inlow Hall as the site of a historical pioneer cemetery.

Representatives from the CTUIR performed a cleansing ceremony at the site, which may have also served as an American Indian burial ground. Armand Minthorn, speaking on behalf of the CTUIR, expressed gratitude to EOU and the community for honoring the individuals buried under Inlow Hall and recognizing the strong connection the tribes have with the Grande Ronde Valley.

Inlow Hall was constructed in 1929 and during the initial excavation process, burial plots dating back to the mid 1800s were uncovered and relocated. However, some of the graves were left intact and exposed human remains were later discovered under the building.

In 2005, EOU hired Blue Mountain Consulting to complete a detailed archeological survey of the site. After gathering input from the community and the CTUIR, the decision was made to install a permanent cement cap encasing the crawl space where the bodies were found.

The Oregon Parks and Recreation Department's Historic Cemeteries Program provided funding for the memorial and Inlow Hall and the surrounding area are now recognized as a state cultural site.

Inlow Hall was built on the grounds of an historic cemetery that predates the construction of the building.

Eastern Oregon University honors the native population and early settlers whose remains still rest beneath this building.

May their memories live on through the history taught and opportunities made obtainable at this institution.

The following memorial is offered in both Nez Perce and English by the Confederated Tribes of the Umatilla Indian Reservation:

2009 Alumni Awards and Athletic Hall of Fame

Every year during Homecoming, EOU salutes the accomplishments and contributions of graduates with the presentation of Alumni Awards and induction of new members to the Athletic Hall of Fame. Nominations are being accepted now for 2009. The recipients will be recognized at the Alumni Honors Ceremony on October 16 at EOU.

The Alumni Association has redefined the awards for 2009 and the criteria for each follows:

Distinguished Alumni Award

The Distinguished Alumni Award is given to former EOU students who, through their professional and personal endeavors, have made significant contributions in service to their alma mater, community, state, and/or nation that have brought honor to themselves and acclaim to EOU. This award is the highest honor and recognition conferred by the EOU Alumni Association and is a once-in-a-lifetime recognition.

Honorary Alumni Award

The Honorary Alumni Award is the highest honor conferred on an individual who has not been a student of EOU, but through exemplary service or involvement has made significant contributions to the advancement, reputation, and/or well being of the university and its community. This award may also be conferred posthumously for students of the university who have been recommended by the executive administration of EOU and endorsed by the EOU Alumni Association Board of Directors.

Dixie Lund Service Award

Dixie Lund is a 1973 graduate of EOU and served the university as a member of the teaching faculty, Dean of Distance Education and twice as Interim President of the university. Her extraordinary and meritorious service exemplifies the highest traditions of service, support, and devotion to EOU. This award is given in recognition of meritorious service to EOU in support of the goals, traditions, and mission of the university and/or Alumni Association.

Athletic Hall of Fame

The EOU Athletic Hall of Fame was established in 1987 to recognize the outstanding achievements of Eastern athletes. In 2002 the Hall of Fame selection committee was formed. The charge of the committee was to formulate categories and criteria for selection. In addition, the committee created a process to accept and review nominations and in 2002 a revised recognition process that included a formal induction ceremony was started. Categories include; team, individual athlete, coach and meritorious service. Nominations are accepted annually between May 1 and June 15 via the EOU athletic web page at www.eou.edu/athletics.

Mountaineer teams in peak performance

By Isaac Williams & Dave Haglund / EOU Athletics

Eastern Oregon University athletics enjoyed outstanding performances on the field and court this season. There were many breathtaking games, exciting last minute scores, and thrilling finishes that kept fans on the edge of their seats.

The hard work paid off for the men's basketball team this year. The Mountaineers advanced to the elite eight of the NAIA Division II and went on to compete in the quarterfinals of the national tournament for the first time in EOU's history. Taking the court in Point Lookout, Mo., the men defeated King College (Tenn.) and went on to oust Northwood University (Fla.).

In a back and forth game, it came down to the last possession for EOU in the quarterfinal match-up with top-seeded and No. 1-ranked Oklahoma Wesleyan University. The Mountaineers were defeated 80-79. The men ended their season 25-8, the last of four Cascade Collegiate Conference, (CCC), teams remaining in the 32-team field.

The cross country teams both finished in the top five with the men taking fourth in the Cascade Conference Championships, while the women took fifth. Head coach Ben Welch's teams sent two members from both the men's and women's teams to the national meet in Kenosha, Wis.

The EOU women's soccer team also made great strides. The team improved as the season progressed, capturing three of their five wins in the last month of the season.

EOU's football team, under the direction of new head coach Tim Camp, had many thrilling moments en route to a 5-6 season that saw the Eastern offense put a lot of points on the board. Five different times this year the team scored 30 or more points and scored 76 in one home game this year against Rocky Mountain College. The defense was also strong for the Mountaineers, holding their opponents to 14 points or less on three different occasions.

Volleyball at Eastern has also seen a great improvement under head coach Kaki McLean. The team finished the year fourth in a very tough Cascade Conference, and hosted one of the most exciting games EOU sports fans have seen. In the first round of the CCC playoffs, the Mountaineers were trailing

2-0 in the best-of-five match against the Concordia Cavaliers. The team rallied to win three straight games and defeat the Cavaliers in front of a packed Quinn Coliseum. The team finished the season with a 20-10 record, the first 20-win season since 1990.

High flying senior Neil Fryer throws down a dunk over The College of Idaho's Bryan Champ. In his four seasons in Mountaineer uniform, Fryer has contributed to 92 wins, two Cascade Conference titles and two trips to the NAIA National Tournament.

Giving back to the community

The visible presence of EOU student-athletes in community programs reflects a commitment to the core value of servant leadership. When they're not in class or at practice, athletes are doing their part to give something back to the community.

Take the women's basketball team, which presents fun basketball training opportunities for students in schools in Union County and around the region. Team members also help out with the local Fire and Safety Fair, (often disguised as Smokey the Bear), the Drug Free Relay and Shelter from the Storm, a non-profit organization that provides support to victims of domestic violence.

Watching a quarterback read with an elementary school student is a common sight at the Reading Buddies program in La Grande schools. And when it came time to harvest crops in the Grande Ronde Valley, the entire football team pitched in to help glean produce to benefit area food banks.

Every autumn when accumulating yard debris can easily become too much to handle, the EOU softball team rakes leaves for donations at more than a hundred houses around town. It's a project the team started in 1995 and people have come to rely on their help. Beginning as early as September, team members rake leaves six days a week until Thanksgiving break.

EOU coaches participate in Coaches vs. Cancer and the Pink Zone Initiative to help raise cancer awareness, and each year all the EOU teams pitch in for a campus-wide clean-up day. The list goes on.

These demonstrations of servant leadership are part of the reason the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics, (NAIA), named EOU a Champions of Character institution for the 2007-08 academic year. EOU exemplified involvement in the five core values that define a successful collegiate athletic program: respect; integrity; responsibility; servant leadership; and sportsmanship. A total of 199 colleges and universities were acknowledged nation-wide.

Overtime

Cashell named Athletic Director of the Year

The Cascade Collegiate Conference honored Rob Cashell, director of athletics at EOU, for outstanding leadership during what proved to be a banner year for the Mountaineers, on and off the field.

Rob Cashell

"It is an honor to be recognized by the Cascade Collegiate Conference and my peers," Cashell said. "I have a wonderful group of dedicated professionals and outstanding student-athletes at EOU that I am blessed to work with, and I share this with them."

Cashell played an instrumental role in the recent athletic facility development on the EOU campus, including the completion of renovations and upgrades to Quinn Coliseum, the replacement of the track and field throws facilities, and the renovation and naming of a softball field.

The CCC also awarded EOU the 2007-08 All-Sports Trophy, which is given annually to the most successful athletic program in the 11-member conference. EOU won or shared four league titles and recorded top three finishes in six out of eight sports.

Leading with compassion and conviction

President Dixie Lund relies on her faith and family when facing tough decisions

By Laura Hancock

“Are you ready to go? Come on, Sunny!” The golden retriever wags her tail enthusiastically. Ed Lund is off for his usual winter morning routine. Take Sunny for a drive to the post office and then to Wal-Mart where Sunny stays snug, sleeping in the back of the car while Ed walks laps with a friend.

“Bye honey! I’ll see you after work!” Dixie Lund calls to her husband as he heads out the door.

Before long, Dixie will be free to enjoy the simple pleasures of an AM ritual that doesn’t revolve solely around her job as president of Eastern Oregon University.

Soon, a new leader of the institution she loves so dearly will be appointed. It hasn’t been easy for Lund, who has helped usher EOU through a dramatic transformation in the past year and half. Within months of her appointment as interim president in July 2007, Lund faced the challenge of trimming $4.1 million from EOU’s budget. Working with members of a Budget and Repositioning Team, Lund defined a Repositioning Plan that was released in early January 2008. The plan outlined the budget reductions and highlighted strategies for EOU to improve efficiency and services to students.

A 36-year career veteran of public higher education, Lund still struggled with the personnel reductions that were part of the repositioning process. Her concern for the university transcends to the individual.

“I am wired to be a one-on-one person,” Lund said. “Having to think of the university as a whole and maybe less so of the effect on an individual was a very difficult thing for me to do.”

President Lund holds her relationship with the campus and community close to her heart. Even when she initially retired after serving as interim president in 2003 she remained connected to the university. She admits that the tension created by the layoffs did begin to take its toll, but in most instances Lund was present when employees received notice.

“Although it was a hard thing for me to do, I preferred to be involved rather than be distant,” Lund said. “It’s important to take the time to let people know that you care about them, but that you still have a job to do.”

The hands-on leadership style Lund purveys is a reflection of her core belief in elbow grease, and as she likes to put it, “good old-fashioned teamwork.”

“It has never bothered me to roll up my sleeves and get to work. That’s just how I approach things,” she said.

In graduate school Lund studied different styles of management. Situational leadership and servant leadership were the techniques that resonated with her the most. A combination of the two is what Lund strives to demonstrate every day on the job.

Before she began her career at EOU, Lund worked as a secretary for a stock brokerage firm. She remembers how some of the secretaries were offended when asked to make coffee or sew a loose button.

“It never seemed like an issue to me, because we were all in it together,” Lund said. “There are times when you’re the servant and other times when you’re the leader, so servant leadership and working as a team are a natural fit for me.”

The ability to make tough decisions is a prerequisite if you’re a university president. During her first term as interim in 2003, Lund took measures to drop Eastern’s dual inter-collegiate athletic affiliation. She devoted a significant amount of time researching the divisions to determine which would be the right fit for Eastern. Ultimately, she made the decision to move EOU to NAIA affiliation. Her conclusion was met with some criticism, but Lund did not waiver.

“When I know in my heart it is the right thing for EOU, I can make those decisions, hold firm and be like steel,” Lund said.

The strong resolve behind her warm smile is met with respect on campus and in the community. The Lunds have lived in La Grande since the early 1970s and have cultivated innumerable friendships through the years. Ed is retired from the Children Services Division of the Oregon Department of Human Services and Dixie has served on the Grande Ronde Hospital Board.

These connections helped bring the community together in support of EOU during what proved to be a trying time. Lund believes the local media also played a vital part.

“The media realized the incredibly critical role they had in reporting the news and also in helping Eastern’s image get turned around,” Lund said. “They took that to heart immediately and the coverage we’ve gotten is almost embarrassing because it is so prolific and positive!”

Lund encourages community members to attend events on campus, and something as simple as wearing blue and gold on Friday is another way people around town are showing their EOU spirit. Area businesses have added “Home of Eastern Oregon University” to their letterhead and several new signs have gone up touting the same adage.

“It has been very encouraging and the support from the community has just been fabulous,” Lund said.

When the call came from OUS Chancellor George Pernsteiner, Dixie and Ed were celebrating their 38th wedding anniversary. They were preparing to leave for her 40th high school reunion in John Day, so when the phone rang, Dixie let the answering machine pick up.

“Since Ed and I both have degrees from Portland State, I assumed it was the alumni association making a fundraising call,” Lund said. “Then I heard a voice on the line, which is unusual for fundraisers to leave a message. I walked back into the room and it was the Chancellor saying he wanted to talk to me. At one point, my heart stopped because I knew there were some difficulties with the administration at EOU, but on the other hand, I thought maybe he just wanted my opinion.”

Dr. Khosrow Fatemi announced his resignation as president of EOU in July 2007 and Lund had been following the news. She called the Chancellor back and was still on the phone when Ed returned from running errands. When she finally put down the receiver and began to explain what she had been asked her to do, tears choked back her words.

Lund told the Chancellor she needed the weekend to think and pray before coming to a decision. A spiritual person, Lund relies on her faith and family for strength, and she turned to Ed for the support she needed at a pivotal moment.

“He told me to look up Colossians 3:23,” Lund said. “When I asked why, he said ‘because it’s written across this sports card I just found.’”

One of Ed’s hobbies is collecting sports cards. During her phone call with the Chancellor he had been searching online for new cards. The verse featured on the card read, “Whatever you do, work at it with all your heart, as working for the Lord, not for men.”

“Talk about an amazing message,” Lund said.

The following morning Lund said she felt a strong impulse to pick up her Bible and turn to Ezekiel.

“I’d never read Ezekiel, so I didn’t even really know what I was looking for, but the impulse was so profound I thought I’d better start reading.”

When studying scripture, Lund underlines certain words or phrases that have personal meaning.

After while, she stopped. Nothing seemed to resonate, but when she turned back to the open pages she saw a passage she had underlined in four different places. It said, “Do not be afraid.”

Lund knew she had to call the Chancellor and tell him her answer was yes. She knew it was the right thing to do and she was ready to give it her all as interim president.

“EOU needed to heal, as did the relations between EOU and the community,” Lund said. “The State Board of Higher Education and the Chancellor also needed to get to know the heartbeat of EOU and I think that’s what I was gifted to do.”

If anyone has a finger on EOU’s pulse, it’s Lund. She experienced first-hand the many changes since she was hired as an instructor in the Division of Social Science and Business in 1973. Later as dean of the Division of Distance Education, she watched an entire system be transformed by the advances of technology. Not only have EOU’s programs and delivery modes changed, so has the campus. Seven buildings are either completely new or have undergone substantial renovations.

Experience tells Lund she is not the right president to carry EOU into the future and she believes the next leader must be a visionary in order to do so. Lund is looking forward to retirement, when being more available to family and friends and taking road trips with Ed will top her to-do list.

As her term draws to a close, there are a few things she’ll miss about being president.

“I’m going to miss the opportunity to represent a university that I respect, am committed to and truly believe in,” Lund said. “I’ll also miss the connection I feel with the students on campus.”

Though she is ready to move on, rest assured that EOU, (and her reserved parking spot in front of Inlow Hall), will always have a special place in President Lund’s heart.

Mary Jo Lemon carries on the tradition of commitment to EOU that is five generations strong and counting.

To say “legacy” when describing the connection between Mary Jo Lemon and EOU is an understatement. Five generations of her family have attended. Lemon’s great-grandmother, grandmother, mother, two sisters, an uncle, her husband and their two children are alumni and her enthusiasm for EOU doesn’t wane.

Lemon is the immediate past president of the EOU Alumni Association. She has served on the board of directors since 2001 and as president since 2005, but her relationship with the university began long before.

Lemon’s mother, Betty Peck, began working for EOU before she graduated from high school in 1934. In 1936 she received her degree from Eastern and made her career there. Thus began a commitment to the university that has carried on through the decades.

“Mother loved her work at the college,” Lemon said. “She adored the professors and everyone who worked there. They were like part of the family. The university was her life.”

Peck served seven EOU presidents, beginning with Dr. Harvey Inlow, the first president of Eastern Oregon Normal School.

Peck retired in 1982 and her dedication was honored posthumously in 2007 by a plaque on the Walk of Fame. Situated next to a red maple tree between Pierce Library and Inlow Hall, the plaque memorializes her extraordinary contribution to EOU.

Lemon graduated from EOU in 1967 with a degree in education and went to work teaching the first grade at S.E. Miller Elementary School in Union. She said EOU did a great job preparing her for her career in education, which spanned 32 years.

Lemon shares her mother’s love and dedication for EOU. When she was little, Lemon said her mother always told her that she would go to Eastern. Lemon never doubted that, and in fact, told her children the same thing. When she doled out their allowances, half of the money went for spending and the other half was set aside for their Eastern college accounts.

Her son, Greg Lemon, received a degree in English from EOU in 2000, and went on to earn a master’s degree in journalism at the University of Montana. He is now editor of the “The Sun” newspaper in Bozeman, and recently wrote a biography of Montana Governor Brian Schweitzer published in 2008.

Daughter Jennifer also graduated from EOU in 2000 from the nursing program. She is a registered nurse in Boise, Idaho and she and her husband recently welcomed a new addition to the family, Noah, born in June.

Lemon said her term as Alumni Association president was very rewarding and she received a great deal of support from her husband, Terry.

“Terry is absolutely wonderful. He is always right there helping with events. During Homecoming we open up our home so that alumni can stay with us and enjoy the festivities. He’s a real trooper.”

Just because she’s retired doesn’t mean Lemon is taking life slow and easy these days. She is co-president of St. Anne’s Guild at St. Peter’s Episcopal Church and is involved in several fraternal organizations in the community. She and Terry, along with their dog, Keisha, make their home in La Grande in the house they built in the 1970s.

Distance education program proves a perfect fit

By Stephanie Brookhart

The online distance education program at EOU is creating family legacies across the country, not just here in Oregon.

For Lori Cummings, completion of her degree from EOU has led to such an exciting career path that her son has been inspired to finish his degree as well.

Cummings attended college briefly right after high school, but due to family commitments she wasn't able to finish. At age 30 she returned to the classroom for the next three years at Auburn University-Montgomery, Ala. At the beginning of her fourth year in school she was hired by the Montgomery CBS-TV network station. With just a couple of semesters left, a family to support and a great job offer, Cummings decided to put off finishing her degree.

"I took a break from school because I couldn't go to school full-time and work full-time," Cummings said. "I always wanted to be a television journalist and felt this huge job opportunity would help me reach that goal."

Her career path took another unexpected turn when she was hired as an associate producer for the PBS affiliate in Alabama.

"I had to have my degree to keep working at Alabama Public Television but it was too difficult to go to school and work full-time," Cummings said. "I did some web research and found EOU."

Because she was working on a political television program, Cummings decided to add political science to her interdisciplinary studies. She graduated from EOU in 2002 with a degree in liberal studies, including subject areas in communications and political science and a minor in theatre.

"So many people told me that women over 30 never make it in television," Cummings said. "I proved them wrong. If you work hard you can accomplish anything that you put your mind to. You just have to want it! Working full-time and going to EOU worked for me and my family. I did a lot of homework at night but I was home and could also help my sons with their homework if they needed me."

Distance education is working for her son, Lee Biela, as well. Biela is the head baseball coach at Crenshaw Christian Academy, a private high school in Alabama, and also has a family to support. He found himself facing the same situation as his mother, needing to finish his degree while working in order to continue in his job. Cummings suggested that he contact

Elizabeth Burton, director of EOU's regional center in Baker City, because she was so pleased with Burton's expertise and encouragement during her studies.

Biela is currently majoring in liberal studies with an individualized plan in physical education and history and Burton is his adviser.

After nine years at APT, Cummings now hosts and produces three shows, "Face to Face,"

"Capitol Journal" and "Alabama Stories," which can be viewed online at www.aptv.org.

Her duties include

research,

interviews, writing

scripts and editing. Cummings said that as a producer, she is responsible for the entire content of the show.

"You are never too old to follow your dream," Cummings said, "and EOU helped make my dream become a reality!"

"Working full-time and going to EOU worked for me and my family."

Greetings from the Alumni Association

Dear Alumni, Friends and Supporters of EOU,

I bring you greetings on behalf of the Eastern Oregon University Alumni Association executive officers and Board of Directors. I am both humbled and honored to have been elected to serve the association and EOU as the President of the Alumni Association for this year.

I chose EOU as an undergraduate because of the opportunities it provided to be engaged in the life of the campus, to get to know faculty and staff and have them take interest in me as an individual, and the opportunity to excel both academically and personally. I believe many of us as alumni shared this experience of EOU as an academic family. We expect future generations of EOU students to have a similar collegiate experience of access and opportunity as we enjoyed. Having spent 31 years as a professional in student services at EOU, I can say the things we loved most about EOU still thrive. The resilience of the university even in these challenging times is inspiring. As alumni we can be especially proud of our institution, the achievements of our faculty, the curricular and co-curricular successes of our students, and the servant leadership role EOU assumes throughout our region. Go Mountaineers!

The members of the Board of Directors and officers of the association are a wonderful group of people who are dedicated in their service to EOU and the alumni who are a cherished part of the EOU family. I wish to acknowledge their contributions and express my sincere appreciation for their involvement. The door is open for those alumni who wish to remain engaged in their alma mater, whether it is as a volunteer, a scholarship donor, or by staying connected with classmates and friends through attendance at one of the many regional events sponsored by the Alumni Association throughout the year. You are always warmly welcomed and appreciated.

As alumni you are important to the success of the university and I strongly encourage you to stay connected. Go online to www.eou.edu/alumni, update your information, check out the calendar of events, and most importantly, join us when you can. I hope to have the opportunity to see you in the near future.

Sincerely,

Michael S. Daugherty, '74

DONOR SPOTLIGHT

Rema Fleener knows the importance of continuing education. She also understands the economic challenges that often make the goal of obtaining a college degree seem out of reach.

That's why Rema and her late sister Ella Gould established a scholarship fund with the EOU Foundation to help students from rural communities reach their potential. Rema grew up on a ranch near the remote town of Juntura, between John Day and Ontario. She earned her bachelor's degree in education from Eastern in 1939-40 and went on to teach for 38 consecutive years.

"People were so kind and helpful to me and I've had a love for Eastern ever since," Rema said. "The school focused on recruiting students from rural communities and that really impressed me."

At age 93, Rema's enthusiasm proves she is still a teacher at heart. "I think everybody should go to college... it opens doors," she said. "The letters I've received from past scholarship recipients are just priceless."

The Fleener-Gould Scholarship Endowment Fund helps to provide students with high financial need, particularly those from rural communities, the opportunity to complete their education.
