Assessment Report - Four Column

Eastern Oregon University
Program (CAS) History

Catalog Description: The BA/BS in History is designed to provide students with a historically informed perspective on events and ideas that have shaped the contemporary world. Courses expose students to the histories of various cultures over time and place, emphasizing the diversity of historical experiences around the globe. The History Program offers students depth and breadth of historical knowledge and hones their critical thinking skills so that students may use a historical perspective to deepen their understanding of diverse cultures in their own world and their relationship to those cultures. The program helps prepare students for future career growth, in fields such as teaching, public service, business, and law through offering intellectually challenging and multicultural courses with an active learning environment. The program also provides a historical background for the study of other disciplines and for engaged citizenship.

How Program serves the Mission: The history program serves the general education core and provides students in the major with internship and practicum experiences in area museums as well as research opportunities through regional heritage projects. Learning activities in history courses respond to the university mission of guiding students through an integrated, high quality liberal arts program. Emphasis on critical thinking, breadth of historical knowledge and sensitivity to diverse historical experience prepares students to participate responsibly and reflectively in a global environment. The learning outcomes achieved by these courses are relevant to student learning outside of the history program because they offer basic training in developing analytical skills, effective writing skills, and independent critical thinking skills that can be applied to other university courses as well as future employment. The courses’ emphasis on historical diversity and multiple perspectives of historical events also provides students with a sensitivity to ethnic and cultural diversity that today’s employers find highly desirable.

<td>07/12/2011 - The students rose to the occasion in responding to the criterion-referenced questions in the gradient scoring guide. However, as a result of the assessment, I would like the assignment better as a midterm than a final project, as there was too much material for it to be used as a final exam on content knowledge. Because the assessment method was narrative in form rather than a test, the project was ultimately too big and too sophisticated to lend itself to a real assessment of content knowledge. It would have been better to have embedded identification of content knowledge within a test. Benchmark Met: Yes</td>
<td>07/12/2011 - I would still like to use this kind of project as a mid-term check on content knowledge, as it forces students to be critical about content knowledge and make connections and I can see how they are using knowledge to engage in critical thinking and analysis of documents, but I may need to rethink in terms of a reasonable time frame, but still doable. At the 200-level, the project may be too much. Rather than water it</td>

down, I would scale it back and build up the learning in areas other than content.

This assessment will prompt a Spring 2010 Program discussion to figure out how to structure program course offerings so that students can succeed in increments or through scaffolding of the learning. One way to better prepare students for an assignment like the one assessed here is to have pre-requisites or co-enrollment requirements in writing (115 or 121) rather than only a recommendation that students have this.

This assessment also prompts the Program to go through the curricular process to make this course UWR and so formalize the expectations in writing. Assessment will help the Program see we need 200-level courses, but we need to make it clear that we have introductory survey courses, and 200-level courses build on 100-level skills as a gateway to upper division courses.

In short, we need to prepare students more intentionally for the major and to develop in them necessary reading/writing skills so they're ready to attend to and do historical research.

| 07/12/2011 - As archetypes, these characters are very useful to refer back to in describing and analyzing the economic and social history of Europe since the Industrial Revolution. Assessment Summary
| 10/31/2012 - In general we are very happy with the results of the History capstone. Certainly students learn and apply the professional standards of academic history. The problem is that students receive six credits for over a year?s worth of work and they recognize this as both unfair and impractical. As a result, students tend to shy away from a history major. In an increasingly enrollment-driven climate, this is not helpful for our program or for those students who would like to pursue a history major but are put off by the capstone requirements. This past year, the faculty worked on envisioning a revised capstone that would retain academic rigor but be more in line with other programs? capstones at the university.

This work was done in conjunction with our move to offer our major online beginning Fall 2011. We feel that much of the research of the capstone can and should be done in a revised 420 Historiography class that will be HIST 303 beginning as soon as Winter 2012. This will leave a 5 credit capstone course that will be drafting and revising only. In essence, the capstone will become a one-term course, preceded by a 5 credit research course. This was our recommendation to the Provost as we submitted our approved on-line major with an explanation of how that online major model would then inform changes to the major and its capstone on campus.
