Translation and Transformation of Writing Pedagogy: Moving From Face-to-Face to Online

Teaching writing and using it to teach content-based concepts in online courses requires faculty to consider their current pedagogy and modify that pedagogy to serve students at a distance. In this colloquium, a panel of university faculty in Education, English/Writing, Business, and Religious Studies will discuss ways they translated and transformed their pedagogy for online learning. Participants will have the opportunity to glean from these experiences and explore a variety of technological methods that can be easily integrated into their online classes and taken back to their face-to-face teaching.

Thursday, October 24th @ 4:00pm
Ackerman Hall, Room 210

Guest Presenters:
Tawnya L. Lubbes, MTE
Assistant Professor of Education and ESOL Program Team Leader
Nancy Knowles, PhD
Professor of English and Writing and Director of the Oregon Writing Project at EOU
Stephen Clements, PhD
Associate Dean, College of Business

With Special Guests: Heidi Harris, Ph.D., Associate Professor, University of Arkansas: Little Rock & Jacob Harris, Instructor, Pulaski Academy, Little Rock

Library resource list:
http://library.eou.edu/colloquium